The Coremony in the Fifth Avenue Pro tering Church Followed by an Elaborat Breakfast Given by Mrs. W. M. Tander bill in Money of the First Marriage

In the presence of their parents and relatives and a distinguished company of guests them Maria Louise Shepard, the eldest daughter of Col. and Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, and granddaughter of the late William H. Vanderbilt, and Mr. William Jar Schieffelin, the son of Mr. William H. Schieffelin, were married at noon yesterday in the Fifth Avenue Presbytarian Church.

For nearly two hours before the time set for the ceremony the sidewalks surrounding the church and the entrances to the building were filled with women, and the seate within the church were nearly all escupied before half-the organ beloom above were elaborate. Gar-lands of tulips, primroses, and other choice flowers were hung across the balcony and masses of roses and lilies of the valley, surrounded by tall forms and palms decorated the band necklase of diamonda, a gift from one of her aunis. Her boundet was of lilles of the walley, to which were attached long streamers of white satin ribboa. The bridesmaid were similarly attired in pretty g.wms of white corded silk over chillon, with louis XVI. coats, trimmed with white ostrich feathers. Each wore a large while leit hat dressed with white ostrich feathers and pompons. On the corsage they displayed the bride's gift small diamond and learl star pins. Their bouquets were of Catharna Mermatrosca. The two little madds of onor wore plain dresses of white silk, white hat with feathers, and each carried a bouquet of pink roses.

The marriage ceremony was impressively yer ormed by Dr. Hail, and was followed by a wedding breakingt given by the bride's grandmother. Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, at her residence, Fifty-lirst t-treet and Fifth avenue. Arriving at the Vanderbilt mansion the young couple book up their position in what is known as the jewelled room, the walls of which are inneg with tapeatry studied with precious stones, the panelling being of mother of beat. The young couple received the congratulations of their friends standing in the bay window facing Fifth avenue, surrounded by 25,000 littles of the yelley. The windows of the room were cuttained with purple orchida. Breakfast was served in the second art gallery, the Japanese room, library, diving room, and in the first art gallery, where was set the bridal table, 20 feet long and 5 feet wide. The People who Saw Miss Recker's Paint If the stories told yesterday by a number of people are true, Ambulance Surgeon McDonald of the Roosevelt Hospital has a serious charge to answer. He accompanied the ambulance between 6 and 7 o'clock on Wednesday evening to the drug store of Kellogg & Co., 6.023 Sixth avenue, almost opposite the Fifty-eighth street elevated station, to attend Miss Jeanette ing home from work by four men, and was suffering from nervous prostration. Dr. W. A. Ewing of 184 West Fifty-eighth street had first been called in. He declared that the girl's condition was so serious that she needed constant medical attendance and that an ambulance be called. Policeman station went to Loosevelt Hospital for one. It came, in charge of Dr. McDonald. Fully half an hour elapsed before it arrived, and Miss Becker lay on a sofa suffering from paroxyms

WANTED A BANSOM FOR THE NOTES An Attempt to Force a New York Beak to Give $1,050 for Its Own.

Boston, Feb. 5.-Last November a clerk in the Pourth National Bank of New York addressed Bank, Greenwood, Misa." The handwriting was indistinct, and the letter turned up at Greenwood, Mass. The Postmaster of that town, thinking it might be intended for the husband of Mrs. Catherine S. Anderson, sent it to her by her daughter. Mrs. Anderson thought she had drawn a lottery prize, for when she opened the letter promiseory notes to the value of $9,800 fell into her lap.

A few days afterward the bank received a letter signed "A." stating, among other things, that the notes would be given up upon payment of $1,050, and the acceptance of this proposal was to be published in the Lynn item or in some other newspaper named. Shortly after this the inspectors at the Boston Post Office began a correspondence with "A.,"
who was addressed in ears of one Mckinnon, who keeps a restaurant near the Providence lialized station, and who, it now appears, is Mrs. Anderson's brother. The letters from "A."
were mailed at various places, such as histores, Bighlands, Stoneham, and Wakelield. Yesterday noon the correspondence had progressed

While he was in the place the postman came in with one of the decoy letters addressed to "A." in the care of McKinnon. When McKinnon opened it he was arrested. This morning Mrs. McKinnon and another woman appeared at the effice of United States Commissioner Hallett, and the former inquired if she could bail ont her hunband. The Commissioner Hallett, and the former inquired if she could bail ont her hunband. The Commissioner whose judicial curiosity had been excited, turned to the other woman and saked her a few questions, which resulted in the discovery that she was Mrs. Anderson. She admitted that she had the notes and was ready to give them up, provided that no proceedings would be taken against Ber. The Commissioner simply intimated to her that the Grand Jury would be pleased to have her attend its session in March next.

Airs, Anderson is the wife of a carpenter who is believed by the Peat Office inspectors to know nothing about the matter. She is about 45 years old. She does not seem to realize the gravity of the situation, and treats the affair as though she was simply claiming a reward for keeping the notes assign.

Their influence was, in my opinion, only for good, and all the parsons on the General Committee last fall will certainly be invited to be present at the reunion in Scottish Rite Hall.

Wheeler H. Peckham, the Prime Minister of the P. M. L., also said the report, in his estimation, was erropeous.

"But go around and see Mr. Deming. I have been out of town lately and know little about the movement." Mr. Peckham said. "One thing I do know, and that is, if the parsons are not invited to the ression in Scottish Rite Hall, there will be trouble for somebody. I do not believe that they hurt the movement at all, and if they are slighted now I will know the reason why."

After he had passed through the several compartments and the plungs, the attendant left him in the "lounging" room. Five minutes later the attendant returned, but THAT DEATHBED CODICIL

MISS JOYUE THINKS FATERWEATHER WAS UNFIT TO SIGN IT. Made Executor Vanghan a Residency Legatee, and It Was Drafted by Gea. Woodford at Mr. Vanghan's Instance on Mr. Fayerweather's Last Day.

When the Payerweather will, with its be-When the Fayerweather will, with its bequests amounting to millions for colleges and its codicils giving absolutely nearly three millions of dollars to the executors, was made public it was found that the last codicil by which Henry B, Vaughan, the third executor, was also made a residuary lecated was signed on the day of the testator's death. The signature of Daniel B, Fayerweather was wavering, and had evidently been written by a man who was very weak. Until yesterday the facts and incidents of this death-bed transaction had not been made public.

Mr. Fayerweather died about 11 o'clock or the evening of Nov. 15, 1890, and yesterday Mrs. Fayerweather's niece, who witnessed this codicil, testified in the Surrogate's court that a condition of mind or body to transact such business.
When Gan, Woodford again took the witness stand the court room was crowded. Mr. Rol-lins and Gen. Woodford went to work in earnest, the former questioning closely and the latter smiling and protesting that he was anx-ious to be very frank and tell all that he knew about the execution of the codicils.

In the second codicil, that was executed on Jan. 2, 1888, was added as a third executor to those already named, Henry B. Vaughan. Gen. Woodford was not present when this codicil was executed. Mr. Rollins asked Gen. Woodford executor who was afterward present at the testator's death bed, and who was specially interested in the fourth codicil. Gen. Woodford said that when the second codicil was executed he was ignorant of Mr. Faverweather's inten-tion of making Mr. Vaughan a sharer in the residuary estate. "Knowing that Mr. Ritch and Mr. Bulkley had already been named as residuary legates, did you not sak the testator if he intended Vaughan also to share in the residue?" asked Mr. Holling."

"Knowing that Mr. Hiten and Mr. Dulking and ready been named as residuary legates, did you not sak the testator if he intended Vanghan also te share in the residue?" asked Mr. Richina. "Add not." said Gen. Woodford, positively. "Did it not make a great difference to Mr. Ritch whether Mr. Vanghan was to have a share in the residue of the estate or not?" This question raised a row, but the Surrygate said that den. Woodford might answer it, and he replied that it certainly did make a difference.

"And now, Gen. Woodford, can you honestly say that you and Mr. Ritch had no talk about this matter?"

Gen. Woodford did not remember any such conversation. He declined, on the ground of professional privilege, to give any conversations that he had with Mr. Fayerweather after the execution of the second codiell. He was willing to admit, however, after Mr. Rolling had refreshed his memory, that Mr. Fayerweather had told him before the execution of this codiell that he intended to make Mr. Yaughan an executor, but not a residuary legates. Mr. Rolling expressed his delight in being able in any way to refresh the witness's memory, and expressed some surprise that so important a lact had been forgotten. Again Gen. Woodford smiled.

"Did you have any conversation with Mr. Yaughan?"

"I decline to answer any questions as to professional communications."

The examination was then directed to the fourth codicil which was signed by Mr. Fayerweather a few hours before his death. Gen. Woodford said that he had drawn it on the day that it was signed.

"Did you receive instructions from Mr. Fayerweather a few hours before his death. Gen. Woodford said that he had drawn it on the day that it was signed.

"Did you receive instructions from Mr. Fayerweather and he therefore accepted Mr. Fayerweather and he therefore accepted Mr. Yaughan statement that he had the authority to give him the testator's directions for this codici. The substance of these instructions the wilness declined to state. Mr. Yaughan brought and he brought Mr. Fayerweat swered:

No. sir. I never heard of art, anten bear characterized by any person."

Gen. Woodford did not remember either that Mr. Ritch had written a letter to Miss Jorce or Mr. Fayerweather within a week of his death, saying that he was an honorable man, and that Mr. Fayerweather need have no suspicion of Mim.

Mr. Rollins called on Mr. Arnoux for a draft of any such letter. Mr. Arnoux said he had none, and that if there were such a letter the original would be with the contestants.

"Yes." retoried Mr. Rollins, "unless it had been destroyed by Mr. Yaughan or some one else."

"Have you ever heard that Vaughan destroyed the codicil drawn by Evarts, Choate &

"Have you ever heard that Vaughan destroyed the codicil drawn by Evarta. Choate & Beaman on the day the last codicil was executed?"

"I have never heard that from any one." answered the witness.

"How do you account for it that this fourth codicil was drawn in such a hurry. Individually was drawn in such a hurry. Individually when this codicil had been draited by Gen. Woodford on Nov. 15 it was taken to Mr. Fayerweather's house by Mr. Vaughan, accompanied by two clerks. J. P. Browning and E. M. Grout, who witnessed its execution. Gen. Woodford was not present when Mr. Fayerweather sized it.

Bradford W. Hitchcock was recalled. He had witnessed the execution of the first codicil, and Mr. Condert asked him if he had not said, when he discovered that this codicil took away the residuary provisions for the colleges in the will, that hir. Fayerweather did not know what he was doing. Mr. Hitchcock said that he had not. Mr. Hitchcock said that he had not. Mr. Hitch the probabilities of the will being invalid under the act of 1960. Mr. Ritch had said that a codicil would be executed within sixty days. He also stated that Mrs. Fayerweather was ill with a fatal malady and could not live long.

"Mr. Hitch then thought that the will constand sufficient provision for a dead woman r" suggested Mr. Coudert.

Miss Elizabeth R. Joyce of New Haven, who said that she was 21 years old, was the most important witness that has thus far been heard. She is a neice of firs. Fayerweather, and has frequently sisted her. A the time of Mr. Fayerweather's death she was living at his house.

Mina Joyce said that it was signed on the day of Mr. Fayerweather's death.

"Were you called into your uncle's room to sign it? asked Mr. Coudert.

"Yes, He was at that time in ted. It was about 20 clock, and my aunt, Miss Amelia Joyce, told me that Mr. Vaughan wanted me

"Was your uncle able, so far as you could indge, to converse with you?"

"No. I think not, except to answer in a very weak way the questions that were asked him.
and most of these I think he answered by a nod."

Miss Joyce said that she was in the room only about five minutes, and that Mr. Grout had asked Mr. Fayerweather the questions that were necessary for the execution of the codicil.

"In your deposition you are reported as saying that Mr. Fayerweather was in sound mind, memory, and understanding. Do you now think that he was "

"I do not, because he was dying."

"I did it without thinking."

Mr. Condert then asked about the codicil that was drawn in the office of Evarta, Choate

"On the lith of November were you a witness to another paper?"

"Yes; my uncle was then sitting up. Dr.
Vedder. Dr. Wilcox, and a man who brought the paper were in the room. Mr. Vaughan was not there. After I had signed this paper I do not know what became of it."

"Hare you sen that paper since?"

Mr. Parsons took up the examination at this point for the executors, and Miss Joyce told him that she had heard some time between 11 and 12 o clock in the foreneon of Nov. 15 that Mr. Fayerweather was going to execute another codicil, and that she was wanted as a witness, she did not know whether or not Mrs. Fayerweather know that such a paper was to be executed. No. I do not think that I did."

Miss Joyce said that the will was read by Mr. Ritch on the day of Mr. Fayerweather's luneral, and that she had frequently taked of it with the widow. She said that when she signed the deposition at the Surroyate's office she supposed that she was acknowledging her signature to the codioil. Mr. Parsons questioned her closely in regard to the oath that she took when she signed the deposition but the witness did not get confined. The examination was adjourned at this point until next Wednesday.

PITTSTON, Pa., Feb. 5.-At half past 6 o'clock to-night, a short distance above Pittston Junction, on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, engine No. 190, which was pushing a car containing number of workmen to the Coxton coal yards, ran into the rear end of a freight train standing on the main track. The car was totally wrecked, Most of the men jumped and were saved. Martin Finnegan was killed and two others, flartin Gerrity and John McNamara, were badly injured. The freight train had a warning flag out, but the engineer of the accommodation train failed to notice it.

A Boller Blows Itself Up a Mill. NEW WILMINGTON, Pa. Feb. &-The boiler at the Hamilton oil well, three miles north of here, exploded at 11 o'clock to-day, instantly rilling Frederick Johnston, a criller, aged 21 years. The force of the explosion carried the biggest part of the boiler to a hill top 400 yards away. One hundred pounds of steam were on at the time.
